The Deep End of the Pool

In this age of technology, of bits and bytes of print, and of instant communication, how will we encourage our students to engage in reflective, intensive and extensive inquiry, so that they will move beyond the surface and discover the satisfaction of thinking and feeling at the deepest levels?

David Booth is Professor Emeritus at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education (OISE), University of Toronto, and Chair of the Literacy Centre at the Schulich School of Education, Nipissing University.
